RE: Story on "pro-choice" message missed 20 years of history

Dear Ms. Calmes:

As a long time reproductive justice advocate and (among other things) a former Vice President of Public Affairs at Planned Parenthood of New York City, I want to bring to your attention language and history missing from your story about the pro-choice message.

In fact, women of color leaders have long challenged that message and as early as 1994 offered a vibrant, movement building alternative: "Reproductive Justice." Up until their announcement in January of 2013, Planned Parenthood used and defended the term "pro-choice." While no one term has replaced that label, it is incorrect to suggest that challenges to it are new or led by Planned Parenthood.

I hope future coverage of this issue will recognize the depth and breadth of organizations and leadership by women of color, young women, and progressive white leaders who have long rejected the term pro-choice and the narrow political agenda it has represented.
